

9. Should copyright owners have to affirmatively consent (opt in) to the use of their works for training materials, or should they be provided with the means to object (opt out)?

Copyright owners should have to affirmatively consent (opt in). The current electronic landscape already has significant data collection that occurs, even without an opt out option. Copyright owners should not have to automatically provide access to their work and then retroactively opt out.