To the U.S. Copyright Office

I hope this letter finds you well. I have written this to state my ideas and opinions regarding the copyright of AI.

I think that AI is a brilliant concept that can greatly benefit us humans, however it may also violate some copyright laws. Here's why: It is not fair that humans can spend countless hours on something, just for it to get swiped straight into AI's system. There needs to be boundaries. There should be a website where people upload things that they give consent to be used by AI.

I understand that AI uses information and images made or created by humans as a reference and inspiration to their work, So I think an alternative option could be that AI should put things into a scanner to see if it is copying anything on the internet. If the scanner finds large similarities in something the AI makes to something a human makes, then it should be considered copyright and not used.

With these simple ideas, I think that AI could become a lot safer and better for society. I await your response and appreciate your dedication to addressing the evolving challenges in the realm of copyright.

Sincerely,

Jack
